Biographical/Historical Note

The Work Projects Administration (W.P.A.) was created by Franklin D. Roosevelt's presidential order in 1935 and became the largest New Deal agency, employing millions of people and affecting almost everywhere in the United States. The W.P.A. provided jobs and income to unemployed Americans during the Great Depression and was integral in building up the nation's infrastructure and operating arts, media, literacy, and recreation projects for Americans.

Scope and Content Note

This collection contains programs and reports regarding the Works Project Administration's Community Service Programs Recreation Project from 1938 to 1941. These materials were meant for the supervisors of these programs and include information on training and how to be effective leaders.
