Biographical Information

Ray C. Anderson (July 28, 1934 – August 8, 2011) was born in West Point, Georgia. He was an honors graduate of the Georgia Institute of Technology's (Georgia Tech) school of industrial and systems engineering in 1956. Anderson learned the carpet trade through various positions at Deering-Milliken and Callaway Mills, and in 1973, set about founding a company to produce the first free-lay carpet tiles in America. As of 2017 Interface, based in Atlanta, is the world's largest producer of modular commercial floorcoverings. It is also a diversified and global business, with sales in 110 countries and manufacturing facilities on four continents.

After decades of business success, Anderson had an epiphany that came to be known as his "spear in the chest" moment. This moment occurred when reading Paul Hawken's The Ecology of Commerce in preparation for a speech to answer questions from clients about the environmental impact of his business. Anderson's outlook on the importance of environmental responsibility was forever changed and he established a new vision for his company, "Mission Zero™" the plan to eliminate Interface's environmental impact by 2020. As of 2010 the company was well on its way to meeting that goal while showing they could still remain profitable. Anderson chronicled that journey in two books, Mid-Course Correction (1998) and Confessions of a Radical Industrialist (2009).

Ray Anderson embraced the principles of sustainability in his personal life as well championing the environment through words and actions, including forgoing a luxury car for a Prius and building his off the grid sustainable design home in Highlands, North Carolina. Also inspired were his children and grandchildren who continue his work through the Ray C. Anderson Foundation.

Scope and Content Note

This collection contain biographical materials, business records, correspondence, organizational records, photographs, presentations, speeches, writings, travel files, and books documenting Ray C. Anderson's life. Documents from Anderson's education and football career at West Point High School and the Georgia Institute of Technology are included. His activity in many important organizations such as the Georgia Conservancy and the President's Council on Sustainable Development, as well as decades of correspondence with colleagues and significant environmental and political figures including Paul Hawken, Jimmy Carter, and Bill Clinton. Business records include annual reports, board of directors' materials, meeting and financial records, and press releases that document the history of Interface and the company's move to sustainable manufacturing. Ray Anderson wrote two books based on his efforts to make industry greener and profitable leading him to spend much of his later years giving presentations and speeches on the topic. Drafts and edited versions of these publications are included.

This collection is arranged into nine series: Biographical Materials; Business Records; Correspondence; Multimedia; Organizational Records; Photographs; Presentations, Speeches, and Writings; Travel Files; and Books and Journals.
